Title: Antimony in Italy: resource assessment and environmental impact of a “critical raw material”

Titolò: L’antimonio nel territorio italiano: valutazione delle risorse e impatto ambientale di una “materia prima critica”

DESCRIPTION OF THE RESEARCH ACTIVITY

Description: "Critical raw materials" (CRMs), such as antimony (Sb), are crucial to the ecological transition. To reduce importation from abroad, the European Union is pushing toward identifying new resources/reserves within national borders and recovering the element from mining or industrial facilities. Mineral extraction and processing cause the dispersion of Sb and associated toxic elements, such as arsenic (As) and mercury (Hg), to surficial systems, where they accumulate in local biota and may represent a risk for human health. Therefore, for sustainable resource exploitation, it is essential to combine a resource assessment with the effects on ecosystems resulting from mining and production processes from Sb extraction.

The Southern Tuscany-upper Lazio region hosts an important Hg-Sb(Au) metallogenic belt, with deposits exploited for Hg and Sb production until the 1970s-80s. The present research will be focused in the Sb(Au) district with the threefold aim of (i) assessing the long-term environmental impact of the Sb mining/production process in surface aquatic systems, through the mineralogical-geochemical characterization of waters and river sediments draining the mining areas and the estimates of contaminant fluxes flowing to the Mediterranean Sea; (ii) define the genetic processes of deposits, by means of minero-chemical and isotopic surveys; and (iii) quantify available resources of Sb and other CRMs (such as precious metals, tungsten, and germanium). The research is part of the PRIN 2022 Project "The antimony resource in Italy: evaluation of environmental impact and ore exploration of a critical raw material (MOLIERE)" MUR Project Code P20224492Z - CUP B53D23034200001.

The research activity will involve field and laboratory sampling activities. The research activity will also be conducted in collaboration with CNR-IGG Pisa and the University of Cagliari.

Descrizione: Le “materie prime critiche” (CRMs), come l’antimonio (Sb), sono cruciali per la transizione ecologica. Per ridurre l’importazione dall’estero, l’Unione Europea spinge verso l’identificazione di nuove risorse/riserve entro i confini nazionali e il recupero dell’elemento da impianti minerari o industriali.
L’estrazione mineraria e il trattamento del minerale causano la dispersione di Sb e di altri elementi tossici associati, come l’arsenico (As) e il mercurio (Hg), nei sistemi superficiali, dove si accumulano nel biota locale e rappresentano un rischio per la salute umana. Per uno sfruttamento sostenibile delle risorse è dunque fondamentale associare a una valutazione delle risorse gli effetti sugli ecosistemi derivanti dai processi estrattivi e produttivi di antimonio.

La Toscana meridionale-alto Lazio ospita, tra le altre, una cintura metallogenica a Hg-Sb(Au), con depositi sfruttati per l’estrazione di Hg e Sb fino agli anni 70-80. La ricerca sarà focalizzata nel distretto ad Sb(Au) con il triplice fine di i) valutare l’impatto ambientale a lungo termine del processo estrattivo/produttivo di Sb nei sistemi acquatici superficiali, attraverso la caratterizzazione minero-geochimica di acque e sedimenti fluviali drenanti le aree minerarie e stime dei flussi di contaminanti che affluiscono al Mar Mediterraneo; ii) definire la minerogenesi dei depositi, medianti indagini minero-chimiche e isotopiche; iii) quantificare le risorse disponibili di Sb e altri CRM (quali ad esempio metalli preziosi, tungsteno e germanio). La ricerca si inserisce nell’ambito del Progetto PRIN 2022 “The antimony resource in Italy: evaluation of environmental impact and ore exploration of a critical raw material (MOLIERE)” Codice Progetto MUR P20224492Z – CUP B53D23034200001.

L’attività di ricerca prevede attività di campionamento in campagna e di laboratorio. L’attività di ricerca sarà condotta anche in collaborazione con il CNR-IGG Pisa e l’Università di Cagliari.
